

Brigham Young has been so hard pressed lately to furnish spending money to his forty dear wives that he has felt called upon to preach a sermon upon the extravagance of women. He instanced Bro. Kimball, whose rather tall wife Vilate, used to require but six yards of calico for a dress, whereas now she requires from 12 to 18. Brigham calls this extravagance, and his wives are no better.— They all want sewing machines and when they get them they want a hundred yards of cloth to run them on. Brigham really talks as though he was discouraged.
